application. Every application, no matter how large or small, needs some form of security and encryption. Any user data you have is extremely valuable to potential hackers and should be protected. Basic encryption should be used when your application stores a password or some other form of identifying information.

Different levels of sensitive data require different encryption algorithms. Knowing which level to use can be determined by answering the basic question, "Will I ever need access to the original data after it has been encrypted?" When storing a user's password, using a heavily salted MD5 hash and storing that in the database is sufficient; then, you would use the same MD5 hashing on the input and compare the result from the database. When storing other sensitive data that will need to be returned to its original input, you would not be able to use a one-way hashing algorithm such as MD5; you would need a two-way encryption scheme to ensure that the original data can be returned after it's been encrypted.

Encryption is only as powerful as the key used to protect it. Imagine that an attacker breaches your firewall and has an exact clone of your database; without the key, breaking the encryption that protects the sensitive data would be nearly impossible. Keeping the key in a safe place should always be priority number one. Many people use an ini file that's read at runtime and that is not publicly accessible within the scope of the Web server. If your application requires two-way encryption, there are industry standards for protecting such data, one being AES encryption.

The screenshot shows the PTC website interface. At the top, there is a navigation bar with the PTC logo and user information. Below the navigation bar, there are several tabs: "Inspiration Source", "Textile Source", "Pattern/Flats Source", "Editor's Inspiration", "My Favorite", and "Individual Design". The main content area displays a search result for "electronic circuit board". A modal window is open, titled "Selected Textile", which allows the user to review and delete selected items. The modal window has a "Close" button in the top right corner. It features a "Color combination" dropdown menu with the value "#79cc5e,#194c45,#373730". Below the color combination, there are three color swatches (green, dark green, black) and a "Move to the first" button. A "Delete >" button is highlighted with a red box, and a mouse cursor is pointing at it. To the right of the "Delete >" button is a "< Back" button. Below these buttons, there are two columns of textile pattern thumbnails. The right column is titled "Delete" and contains two thumbnails. At the bottom right of the modal window, there are two icons: a save icon (highlighted with a red box) and a trash icon. Below the modal window, there is a search bar with the same color combination and a "Search" button. At the bottom of the page, there are links for "About PTC", "Site map", "Contact us", and "Copyright & Privacy policy".
